iCade is a bit of a Mac user, coz he is still very much into computers, I even paid a visit to his house, iCade, which is hidden inside a big corner cabinet, it's really a Mac fan. I personally think he might have been the one who gets into it. He told me about a good program to insert a video to a CD using Mac, I've known that Mac can do it, but I've never had the chance to try it. Then he showed me the program and told me to have a try. Although it's simply editing a video in iCade, the program I've been told to use is nothing less than Audacity, iCade has given the author a rating of 2.2 stars out of 5. It is an easy and effective program, you can make a video up to 720*480, and you can also choose a number of audio tracks and video output formats, as well as a number of sound effects and music. Not to mention, the program also has a pre-defined play list to insert the video you've just recorded. The main function: [?] Record a video (source media) to a CD [?] Edit video (records and edits) [?] Output video (re-encode) [?] Playback (playback is auto, and it also supports folder recoding) If you have a Mac and you're fond of music, or if you're a Mac user and have a lot of videos in your hard drive, iCade will be able to meet your demand.
