Whatta Bhoj Released December 12, 2019Q: Is it possible to 'torpedo' a melee attack? Is it possible to 'torpedo' a melee attack? Or is that a term only used for spells? An example is a fighter with a weapon with a reach weapon that does damage at the reach of that weapon. If that weapon is used in a 'tense' situation (a creature is on the attack, the creature is charging or jumping), and the action to act is taken immediately, can you torpedo the attack? Or do you have to wait until the end of your reaction to act? A: Technically it's possible for some melee attacks to be torpedoed, but your character is the one making the attack and with some exceptions cannot be torpedoed, per the rules on how to make a melee attack. The idea of torpedoing an attack is to make it fall in to a category of attack that can be used to get a free attack against a target that can't defend against it. Where it falls is up to the GM to decide, but on a D&D 3.5 medieval setting you could consider ranged attacks torpedoes and melee attacks as being

I love the base note in this song. Plus the fact that it's a slow song, although it's not meant to be...but it's slow nevertheless. Great piano. Great acoustics. I listen to this song all the time! Fry I've heard everyone say this is their favorite Shiva Tandava Stotra, but never really thought about why! My favorite reason is that this song incorporates so many common elements in Hindu worship that keep it from getting boring to me.

Glyphosate- and glufosinate-modified starches: perspectives for food and agri-food products. This paper reports on the synthesis of natural and herbicide-modified starches by the reaction of C6-C30 glycosides with a starch derived from potato amylopectin. The resulting material is an amorphous, glassy polymer containing the starch domains. The chemical modifications induced by the glyphosate and glufosinate molecules have been investigated with a view to their potential use for the development of food and agri-food products. Three strategies based on the action of ammonium compounds have been investigated and compared with the commercial formulation of Roundup. The parameters investigated are: the reaction conditions, the nature of the ammonium salt and the ratio between the two reactants. Size exclusion chromatography data were correlated with differential scanning calorimetry (DSC) data and the effects of the different ammonium salt on the melting temperature of the reaction product were studied. These data provide valuable information to assess the interest of this material to be used as a food or an agri-food
